Hybrid Literature for Young Children: Selecting & Integrating Innovative Picture Books in the Early Curriculum

Charles A. Elster, Sonoma State University
Rohnert Park CA elster@sonoma.edu

Learning Objectives: Participants will :

1. Become familiar with the concept of HYBRID LITERARY GENRES & their IMPORTANCE for young children's literacy development.
2. Learn about, examine, and discuss a variety of innovative HYRID PICTURE BOOKS for young children.
3. Consider and practice methods of READING aloud & encouraging children's active RESPONSES to hybrid picture books.
4. Learn about ways to INTEGRATE hybrid pictures books into preschool, kindergarten, and primary grade curriculum.

Agenda

1. Lecture with book samples
 - Hybrid literacy genres
 - Ways of reading & responding
 - Integrating, intro to workshop:
- 2 Workshop: Examine, practice & discuss hybrid books
- 3 Debrief: The books, Reading & responding, Integrating

Genres:

- Are prototypical types of texts and speech acts
- Are mental schemes or frames about how language works in different contexts. - Have four components: typical
 - Structures Content
 - Style Functions
- Structures, styles, & content correspond to functions

Hybrids Genres:

- Mix one or more components of different genres in new ways

Examples: The Talmud, versiprose, Frankenstein, Ulysses, Cloud Atlas.

Hybrid Genres in Children's Literature

- Picture books are an old form of hybrid
- New hybrids combine verse and prose, multiple strands of information, mixtures of styles, and multiple functions.
- Identified by others as radical change (Dresang, 1999), mixed-genre texts (Elster & Hanauer, 2002), multi-genre texts (Flurkey & Goodman, 2004), and post-modern picture books (Sipe & Panteleo, 2008).

Importance:

- Hybrid books show new ways of reading & composing
- New forms of children's literature attract young readers, creating new tastes, challenge teachers to examine ideas re genres & their role in language-literacy learning.
- To be successful, children must learn to be linguistically flexible and to adapt to new communication situations.

Dr. Seuss: On composing The Cat in the Hat.
So... one day I got so distressed about Orlo's plight that I put on my Don Quixote suit and went out on a crusade. I announced loudly to all those within earshot, "Within two short weeks, with one hand tied behind me, I will knock out a story that will thrill the pants right off all Orlos!" My ensuing experience can best be described as not dissimilar to that of being lost with a witch in a tunnel of love....

In writing for kids of the middle first grade, the writer gets his first ghastly shock when he learns about a diabolical little thing known as "The List."... How they compile these lists is still a mystery to me. But somehow or other... with divining rods or something... they've figured out the number of words that a teacher can ram into the average child's noodle.... And there I was, in my shining armor, with my feet nailed down to a pathetic little vocabulary that I swear my Irish setter could master." (Nell, 2007).

 Fun with Dick & Jane The Cat in the Hat If I Ran the Circus

Puff wanted to play and have fun. She wanted to play with Mother. "Mew, mew," she said. Mother said, "I cannot play, Puff. I have work to do. I cannot stop to play with you. Go away, little kitten." And Puff went away. Puff wanted to play with the pigs. She wanted to play with the hens and with the chickens. 'Cluck, cluck, cluck,' said the hen. She did not want to play.	"Now! Now! Have no fear. Have no fear!" said the cat. "My tricks are not bad," said the Cat in the Hat. "Why, we can have lots of good fun, if you wish, With a game that I call UP-UP-UP with a fish!" "Put me down!" said the fish. "This is no fun at all! Put me down!" said the Fish. "I do not want to fall!"	And NOW comes an act of enormous enormance! No former performer's performed this performance! This stunt is too grippingly, slippingly fright'ning! DOWN from the top of my tent like greased lightning Through pots full of lots of big Stickle-Bush Trees Slides a man! What a man! On his Roller-Skate-Skis! And he'll steer without fear and you'll know at a glance That it's Sneelock! The Man who takes chance after chance! And he won't even rip a small hole in his pants.

In the segment of Dick and Jane, the average sentence has 6.2 words, and the longest sentence has 11 words. The segment of Circus has a longer average sentence length, 9.3 words, and the longest sentence is 23 words long. The segment of The Cat in the hat strikes a mean between the two, with an average sentence of 6.9 words, like Dick and Jane, but a long sentence of 23 words like Circus: ("Why, we can have lots of fun... with a fish"). In Dick and Jane, repetition occurs on the level of repeated words and consistent grammatical structures. Most words are of one syllable, but there a few two-syllable words: mother, chickens, cannot and wanted. There is no rhyme to highlight phonically similar words. If I ran the circus has Seuss's trademark anapestic rhythm, internal and end rhyme, and word play, and tall-tale exaggeration of tone and content. It contains three-syllable words (enormous, performance) and made-up words (e.g., enormance, grippingly). he Cat in the hat retains the anapestic rhythm and end rhymes, but the lines of poetry have been shortened from four-beat to two-beat lines. Seuss dispenses with word play and internal rhyme, and he meets the challenge of his easy-reading

Reading & Responding to Hybrid Books

Elster's previous research:

- Teachers reading poems, prose stories, hybrids differently: slower, repetition, child participation, types of questions

- Emergent readers make connections (importations):
- Text-to life: "They're walking cause they don't have any car."
- Text-to-text: "Ready or not, here I come."
- Text-to-pictures: "That catfish is a character, too."
- Reading to previous shared readings: "The dad lit the fire cause kids shouldn't touch matches."

Sipe research (2008) "First graders interpret Wiesner's The Three Pigs

- a. Close examination of peritext
- b. Cognitive dissonance
- c. Traveling into other stories
- d. Resisting story

Arizpe et al "The voices behind the picturebooks." various books, ages 5-8

- a. Performance
- b. Playfulness
- c. Narrative framing devices
- d. Intertextuality & performance
- e. Filling gaps in words & images
- f. Creating shared worlds

Children's Reading Strategies with Hybrid Picture Books

1. Interprets & reads pictures: makes picture to picture connections between books

D Wiesner: Tuesday and The Three pigs

Syd Hoff: Sammy the Seal and Danny and the Dinosaur

2. Interprets & reads pictures: reads comic conventions

Strega Nona: kids notice thought balloon, thinking of pasta pot

Kids notice Big Anthony's hair looks like pasta

3. Reads selectively: A. (gr. 2 girl) reading Universaurus (2006) alone at her desk after finishing other work. Reads through cover to cover. When I interviewed her and asked if she liked special books like this she said yes, what she liked was how the two dinosaurs chase each other thru the book and play hide and seek. The book has general text and speech balloons embedded in full page intense full-color illustrations. She only reads the speech balloons and looks for the dinosaurs, occasionally reading the top especially when the speech balloons refer to text at the top (what color is it?) She re-reads it to me voluntarily, exaggerating the dinos' speech and laughing.

4. Scrolls down: Second grade boy (short hair, striped coat) reads graphic novel after finishing other work: Adventures of Ook and Luk, Kung fu cavemen from the future (2010). Entirely graphic novel. Boy uses arm to block lower panels as he reads upper panel on page . Assists directionality and eye coordination.

5. Prefer dialogue to monologue: Boy in striped coat reads Ook and Luk at desk. Several other boys stand around as her rereads a specially funny page with dialogue about dog food. Boys smile. A. reading Universarus also prefers the dialogue to the narrative. Teacher later remarks that children develop from attention to pictures, then to dialogue, then to narrative.

Teachers' Reading Strategies with Hybrid Picture Books

1. Highlight picture reading in reading lessons: Size of print tells how loud to read.
2. Encourage children to make text-to-text connections: Picture to picture connections in Three Pigs/Tuesday

Suggestions for Teachers

- Give voice to books - bring them alive
- Provide a range & choice of materials
- Encourage connections: text-text, text-world, text-pictures
- Balance of rights in reading: take turns: read then let kids respond
- Use open-ended questions: What did you notice?
- Ask follow-up questions, extend topic
- Integrate with other subjects

Children's literature is for readers and listeners up to about age twelve, the usual age for entering middle school. It is often illustrated. The term is used in senses which sometimes exclude young-adult fiction, comic books, or other genres. Books specifically for children existed by the 17th century. Scholarship on children's literature includes professional organizations, dedicated publications and university courses. There is some debate on what constitutes children's literature. Children's literature or juvenile literature includes stories, books, magazines, and poems that are made for children. Modern children's literature is classified in two different ways: genre or the intended age of the reader. Children's literature can be traced to stories and songs, part of a wider oral tradition, that adults shared with children before publishing existed. The development of early children's literature, before printing was invented, is difficult to trace. Even after printing became Chapter 1. What Is Integrated Curriculum? Innovative educators concerned with improving student achievement are seeking ways to create rigorous, relevant, and engaging curriculum. They are asking questions such as these: We joined this conversation in the early '90s. At the time, we were unaware of the long history of educators with similar concerns. In our separate locations, we defined three approaches to integration—multidisciplinary, interdisciplinary, and transdisciplinary. Students often experience American literature and American history as parallel disciplines. They study a particular period of history and read literature from that period. For example, students read The Red Badge of Courage in English while studying the Civil War in history.
