Keeping Adoption Secret vs. Telling Friends and Family. About Adopted Children. Will My Child Truly Be Loved By His or Her Adoptive Parents? The choice of adoption belongs to the woman who has conceived the child. While this may not seem fair to those who don't agree with her decision, it is irrelevant since it is ultimately a birth mother's choice to determine whether adoption is the best option. However, while there are great benefits that come with the choice for adoption, there are also consequences. Adoption is not a decision to be made lightly. Throughout the adoption process, adoptive parents are constantly encouraged/told to be kind, compassionate, "think of the bmother". And, honestly, there were times I thought, "How the heck did I end up here? What about us?" There were times I thought, "What if I don't think he/she is cute?" (as a former baby nurse, I can say that I personally don't think every baby is cute). Considering I'm in the middle of a career change and plan to work in the adoption community, it would probably be an educational experience as well. Even if I don't identify with everything the author experienced, I'm sure it would benefit me to hear her thoughts and fears. Thanks for the reviews!
