Check with breed rescues. Once you know what breed of dog is right for you, start by looking for a breed rescue. These types of rescues specialize in taking in and rehoming dogs of one specific breed. Search to see if there is a breed rescue in your area.[4] X Research source.Â With a shelter or rescue, you will likely have to fill out an adoption agreement form. Using a breeder, you will probably have to agree to a certain contract specifying the breeder's obligations at the time of adoption.Â To adopt a purebred dog, research breeds and choose one based on your current lifestyle and living conditions. Next, search breed rescues and local shelters for the specific breed you want. You can also check online listings and contact reputable breeders near you to find a purebred dog. Now, Purebred Rescue Dog Adoption helps you decide if adopting a purebred rescue dog is right for you. Professional dog trainer and purebred rescue expert Liz Palika explains how to locate local and national rescue groups, what you can expect in the adoption process--and from your rescued dog--and how to help your dog make a successful transition to your ""foreverhome."" Palika also helps you: * Choose whether to adopt a puppy or an adult, male or female * Prepare your house, yard and family for the new arrival * Handle housetraining with care * Teach your adoptee how to behave
